The growth and prosperity of our trade territory depend largely upon diversified farming and industry. In making loans on live stock, this bank will be as liberal as sound banking will permit. FORMER MAYOR OF MEMPHIS HAS MANY DESCENDANTS HERE

Many descendants of one of Memphis' pioneer citizens, Judge Sylvester Bailey, who served the city in the capacity of mayor in 1846, are still living here. His four living children are Mrs. W. H. Lake, Mrs. George S. Perren, Mrs. E. E. Goodlander and H. W. Bailey. Among his other descendants are Mrs. Henry Mitchell, Henry Mitchell, Jr., Preston Mitchell, Virginia, William Robert, Thomas and Henry Bailey, Mrs. John Everett, Mrs. Millard Nall, Sydney Shepherd, Julia Tyler Bailey and Mrs. Robert York.

Sylvester Bailey was born in Lowville, Lewis county, N. Y., in 1799. He came South, studied medicine and then changed to law and received his degree in Virginia in 1834. He finally came to Memphis and practiced law as a partner of Seth Wheatley. He was the first mayor of what was then called South Memphis, being the territory south of Union avenue and east of Bayou Gass, including Fort Pickering and eastward to Lakone street. The census taken in that year gave Memphis a population of 7,782.

The Hotel Gayoso was completed about this time, being located in a stately grove overlooking the river. Judge Bailey was succeeded as mayor of South Memphis in 1847 by John Timoney Trevaunt. Judge Bailey was at one time judge of the probate court and died in 1864.

of wheat. As both pests are extensively known in Australia, federal experts sent to Madison county are of the opinion the diseases were brought to this country in seed shipped from Australia.

Mrs. Mariah Jane Thompson Still Vigorous at Her Home in Jackson, Tenn.

Still vigorous, although 100 years old last September, Mrs. Mariah Jane Thompson held her annual Mother's day reception Sunday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Clint Mathis, of Jackson, Tenn. Another daughter, Mrs. Bell Thompson, 324 Spruill avenue, Memphis, who was present, declares that "Grandma" Thompson, as she is lovingly designated, is likely to be the host to many more birthday parties and Mother's day celebrations yet, for her health is unimpaired despite her years and she looks forward to a visit to Memphis' Centennial next week with the eagerness of a schoolgirl.

"It was not only a Mother's day celebration at Jackson," declared Mrs. Thompson. "It was grandmother's day and also great-grandmother's day as well. Many who attended mother's last birthday party—her one hundredth—last Summer were apprehensive that they might not again grace the board with the venerable lady who remembers the Civil war as she does events of yesterday. But the families of Mrs. Lucy Taylor, of Tampa, Fla., and many other relatives and friends gathered again Sunday to do 'Grandma' Thompson honor.

Reminiscences of Indian wars in Florida in which one of her brothers was wounded, the Mexican war, the Civil conflict, the brush with Spain and finally the world conflict were clearly related by the venerable lady.

She points with pride to four generations of descendants, but shyly admits that she is as strong as many of them despite her years.

When asked what she had rather have than anything else Grandma Thompson said, "give me my children."

She said she had reared 12 and that they were a great comfort to her in her old age. "Clearness of vision and steadiness of nerve were proven by the exhibition of 35 quilts made by Mrs. Thompson recently, and during the war she is said to have been the champion sweater and sock knitter of Madison county."

Mrs. Thompson was born in Sparta, Tenn., in 1817. Her family moved to West Tennessee, near Indiana, where common. She has resided ever since in this section of the state with the exception of a few years spent in Florida.

Constant application to the work of making and keeping a home are given as reasons for the longevity she has so greatly enjoyed.

A. building. Col. Bacon paid a glowing tribute to the valor and ingenuity of the American soldier and declared that the doughboys accomplished things no other soldier ever dreamed possible.
